The Mathaithi Girls' High School serves 350 girls in the Nyeri district, one of the poorest areas of Kenya. The school is a "district day school" which means it receives the lowest allocation of funds of all types of schools in the nation. This puts the students at a disadvantage compared to students from other, better-funded schools. None of the students at the school are computer literate, though more and more of their life-critical functions require computer skills, for example, submitting scholarship applications online. The ODFL/KIWINS project will build a 625 square foot weatherproof classroom that will serve as a computer and technology lab for the school's students. The target completion date is July 2012.
